

SOM colorings (component planes)

The color of a map unit indicates the relative value of the target variable with respect to mean. Bright red denotes a high value, whereas blue indicates a low level. On some colorings the colors are brighter than on some others: dynamic range is determined by the simulated null hypothesis. See the chapter on statistical significance for further details.

The numerical value is depicted on selected map units.

